— SPIRITS DEFINED —

Bourbon

A whiskey that has been distilled from at least 51% corn. It needs to be aged in new oak barrels, produced and bottled in America, as well as being 80 proof or more after distillation for it to legally qualify under the name Bourbon.

Rye Whiskey

An American spirit made with at least 51% rye, corn, and barley. The fermentation process follows the distilling process of bourbon. Rye that has been aged for 2 years or more without being blended can be dubbed as “Straight Rye.”

Tennessee Whiskey

This is a type of bourbon made in the state of Tennessee, and it has some additional requirements that make it unique. The first requirement for this special drink to be considered such is that they must have been produced within its home state. Secondly, Tennessee whiskey can only be aged if filtered through charred maple wood chips before aging, known as Lincoln County process of charcoal mellowing.

Blended Whiskey

A mixture of different types of whiskeys, as well as colorings, flavors, and other grains.

Single Malt Whiskey

This has to be made from one batch of scotch at a single distillery, aged for 3 years in oak before being bottled. Single is the term it gets its name from too because only malted barley can go into making this spirit – no other grains like rye or corn are allowed due to their lack of consistency with what defines Scotch’s flavor profile.

Vodka

Made commonly from grains, such as rye, rice, wheat, and vegetables, like corn and potatoes. Needs to be distilled at least three times. Depending on where it is produced it’s recommended to be around 30-40% ABV.

Rum

An alcoholic distillate from the fermented juice of sugarcane, sugarcane syrup, sugarcane molasses and other sugarcane by-products, produced at no less than 190 proof in such manner that distillate possess the taste, aroma and characteristic generally attributed to rum, and bottles at no less than 80 proof.

Scotch

Scotch whisky has very strict regulations for how it must be produced. It must be made from malted barley, water and yeast, and distilled in Scotland. Scotch producers are also allowed to include other cereal grains for coloring. The spirit is required to have an ABV of less than 94.8% and be aged using oak barrels for at least three years.

Tequila

Can only be produced, bottled and inspected within the following Mexican states: Jalisco, Nayarit, Guanajuato, Michoacan and Tamaulipas. All tequila must also contain at least 51% of Blue Weber Agave. Most premium tequilas are 100% Blue Weber Agave. To be considered tequila, the spirit must be distilled twice.

Mezcal

All tequila is mezcal, but not all mezcal is tequila. Mezcal is mostly made from Espadin Agave, but there are more than 30 types of agave that can be used for Mezcal production.

Gin

Made using either grain or potato, The key ingredient that makes gin, gin, is that it is infused with juniper and other botanicals. No less than 40% and bottled no less than 80% proof.

No matter what spirit you prefer, we can create the ultimate craft cocktail experience where passion and creativity meet to “form the perfect union” of flavors.
